R is a free programming language that is available for Mac, Windows and Unix operating systems. It is installed on campus and can be downloaded from the Internet. You will be able to use the R console interface to do R exercises. We will provide some of the basic training in the basic R installation.

On the R exercise will get the basic training in how to install and do some basic plots in R. I will help through the semester. An additional fee is the book Modern R by John Fox and John Fox, published by Boca Raton, FL: CRC Press, 2015. <http://boca.com/>

NETIQUETTE

All users should be aware that their behavior impacts others, even online. Help to make all online environments and web-based tools and applications better places to use by following these guidelines. Remember that the nature of the online environment has some things to remember:

1. Always think before you post. In the absence of non-verbal cues, a message can be misinterpreted. So please think twice before you post.
2. Keep it relevant. There are places to chat and post on every day. Don't stray from the discussion in the assigned channels.
3. Never use all caps. This is equivalent to yelling in the online world. It is not a good idea. Only use capital letters when appropriate.
4. Make it easy to read. Use proper grammar and spelling. Use appropriate punctuation. Abbreviate, but don't overdo it. Use the help and guidelines available in the course. A smile is welcome, and being friendly is not.
5. Treat people the same as you would face-to-face (or kinder). It might be easy to hide behind the computer in some cases, but people can tell when you're not in person. Remember, there is a person behind the name you see. Treat all with dignity and respect, and you can expect that in return.
